Did you know?

Hearing loss is the third most common chronic ailment among older adults. For most, hearing aids are the primary means of managing hearing loss that cannot be treated medically or surgically.

How's your hearing?

- Do you struggle to understand a conversation?
- Do you often ask people to repeat themselves?
- Do people complain you turn the TV up too loud?
- Does it seem like people you talk to mumble?

Today's hearing aids are digital microcomputers that can automatically adjust to ensure sounds are audible and comfortable.

Modern technology means hearing aids are more discreet, more comfortable, and most importantly – more effective than ever before.

With a whole host of cutting-edge features, they're hassle-free, cool and even fun to use!

What is an Audiologist?

Audiologists are highly trained healthcare professionals that have a doctoral degree in Audiology. In fact, they are the only professionals trained and licensed to specifically identify, evaluate, diagnose and treat non-medical hearing and balance disorders for all ages.

Your Audiologist will:

- 1) Perform a comprehensive hearing evaluation.
- 2) Discuss your concerns and preferences.
- 3) Recommend the best solution for your needs.

What should I do if I think I have a hearing loss?

The fact is that for most people hearing loss does not go away and when left untreated your quality of life suffers, and treatment options become more limited. Treating hearing loss restores self confidence, security, and independence, improving your quality of life, and providing peace of mind for you and your family.

If you suspect you may have hearing loss, take the first step and schedule a hearing test right away.

Which hearing aids are right for me?

At A&E Audiology we offer a number of brands, styles and levels of technology from the leading manufacturers in the industry including Oticon, Phonak, Widex, and Insound Medical (Lyric).

With so many options available today, there is not a "one-size-fits-all" hearing aid that is appropriate for everyone. Your Audiologist will recommend the best solution based on your type of hearing loss, lifestyle, personal preference, and budget.
